Alison's Time Machine

Alison

By Isabella Woodfill
Once there was a little girl named Alison. One day she was daydreaming while looking at old pictures of her family on the walls in her house. She wondered what life was like back then.
Her older sister, Emma, then called her into her room. Emma asked, "Can you help me with my invention?" Alison was not sure she could trust Emma. She stood in the machine. Alison's younger sister Caroline yelled, "It's a trick! It is a time machine!" Alison heard a button click, and the time machine's doors shut. She felt herself being lifted off the ground. She was scared.
Suddenly, the machine stopped. Alison was relieved. She thought she was at home, but when the door opened, Alison did not recognize the place.
Alison knew she was definitely not at home. Alison noticed the time machine’s dashboard read:
FIND SOMETHING THAT REMINDS YOU OF YOUR HOME TOWN HOUSTON AND PUT IT HERE TO FIND YOUR WAY HOME. Alison noticed a slot below the sign. She stepped out and saw people singing and dancing. She saw beautiful bright colors everywhere and it was hot. She saw a family she hoped could help her. The family was relaxing next to a river. He walked up to the father and said, "Hello, my name is Alison." The father replied in Spanish, "Bienvenido! Me llamo Agustín." ("Welcome! My name is Agustín.") Alison explained she was lost. Agustín then introduced her to his ten children and said you are in Mazatlán, Mexico. He invited her to his house. She saw the portrait she had been daydreaming about at home. Alison asked Agustín if she could borrow the portrait. Agustín was happy to help. Alison went back to the time
The machine roared, the button clicked, and the doors shut. When the doors opened, she found herself back home. Emma ran to Alison and said, "I am so sorry Alison!" Alison replied, "It is okay, Emma. I will not tell mom."
