DID YOU KNOW WHAT ELSE IS POWERED BY YOU?

PBS Learning Media Outreach Houston Public Media’s Director of Education Projects and Initiatives, Dave DeJohn, visited the historic Wynne Unit of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice. Educators from Windham ISD reduce recidivism by helping inmates gain diplomas. Houston Public Media has been a leader in news and education with a focus on topics affecting primary, secondary and continuing higher education throughout the region. Given the knowledge and resources shared by Dave, educators with Windham ISD immediately recognized a fit with PBS educational resources helping over 60,000 inmate students statewide.

The new Waverly ISD Superintendent, Dr. Darol Hail, found that PBS’s editorial policies will help gain the trust of his unique rural community, and sees many applications for PBS educational tools helping teachers in New Waverly. Clear Creek ISD and Channelview ISD are also utilizing these PBS Learning Media benefits. Programs and resources that aid in bridging the gap of higher learner for our community and cultures of Greater Houston are essential to a thriving city and the core of our mission, and it is all powered by you.
State, local, and federal officials unveiled a new 42,000-square foot affordable housing complex in Midtown for veterans. The $16.3 million dollar project is a collaboration between the City of Houston and the county. The city contributed 3.4 million dollars of federal funds towards the project. The Light Rail Lofts is a three-story affordable housing unit, and has a total of 56 studio apartments, half of which are set aside for veterans and their families earning considerably less than the area median income. The lofts are at 4600 Main Street, less than a mile from the Museum District and the Medical Center.

A federal court in Austin will soon hear a lawsuit charging Texas with discriminating against minority voters in last year's redistricting process. Virtually every round of redistricting since the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act has brought some legal action against Texas. But typically, such cases have focused on the rights of Black and Latino Texans. This time, Asian American and Pacific Islander, or AAPI, voters are taking a leading role. Representing Texas is the Office of Attorney General Ken Paxton. The lawsuit, which a judge has combined with a similar suit by Latino and Black voters, will go to trial at the end of September, too late to affect this year’s midterm elections.
HURRICANE HARVEY: 5 YEARS LATER
Feeding Souls During Harvey

As we reflect on one of Houston’s costliest and most devastating natural disasters in the city’s history five years later, Houston Food Bank CEO, Brian Greene, with host Eddie Robinson uncovered how food recovery operations in Houston and New Orleans compare to each other. Like others in our community in this time, Brian managed to keep both his personal home and family needs in check while addressing major food distribution efforts for his community during Harvey.

ARTS & CULTURE
A Range of literary works examine Hurricane Harvey and its aftermath

Five years after Harvey, a number of literary works have been published that chronicle the hurricane, its impact on the region, recovery efforts and accounts of both heartache and heroism. Some books, like Kevin M. Fitzpatrick’s, look at the storm through an academic lens while others are children’s books, faith-based works and photobooks about the storm.

A SAFER COMMUNITY
Hurricane Harvey 5 years later: Reflections on the storm and lessons learned

On August 25, 2017, Hurricane Harvey roared into the Texas coast as a Category 4 hurricane and then turned into a catastrophic flooding disaster for Houston and other parts of the state’s coastline. It hit the Houston area—bringing with it the highest sustained winds at 130 miles per hour and almost 50 inches of rain. Five years later, what do we remember about the storm and the aftermath?

Our local programs have not only expanded in quantity, but they’ve also fit the immediate need of the community. Adding Town Square to the lineup in 2020 happened because of the pandemic, as a way to meet the need for information about something so new and scary. That show doesn’t happen without community support, and we thank you.”

“Houston Public Media programming has impacted my life with Sesame Street when my child was young. Nature and environmental programs now. News programming to keep me up on what’s happening at home and abroad.”
